Q: What does "Error: Invalid file name: " mean in /bin/sh? When I run the following command: ssh -p 23210 ubuntu@network1 `-C -v -i '~/.ssh/.ppk' 'cd /var/lib/gems/1.8/gems/fog/' && RAILS_ENV=production rake assets:precompile --trace I get an error from rake assets:precompile: Error: Invalid file name: ~\.ssh\.ppk I'm not even sure that's the right path. And the path is there in.ssh/. If I remove the path, it still doesn't work. A: It's a shell-specific feature which means you should probably be using bash instead of sh. What's New in the Adobe Photoshop 2022 (version 23)?

The modern workplace can be demanding, and finding balance between family, work and personal time can be difficult. A recent study by Pew Research shows that Americans are increasingly working while on the go. Millennials in particular are living on their mobile devices and computers. While we may have to juggle between our various jobs on a daily basis, we rarely take the time to assess the impacts that these different daily activities have on our energy levels. How Do We Allocate Our Energy? Our energy comes from multiple sources. Some people have more energy than others, and there are limits to the energy one can utilize throughout the day. The different sources of energy can be classified into primary, secondary, and tertiary. Primary Sources These are the materials that we create from scratch. These are elements that do not exist in the ground, like air, water, and soil. Primary sources of energy that we use include the sun, lightning, wind, waves, and geothermal. The energy that comes from the sun, the earth, the wind, and lightning is readily available and therefore they are classified as primary sources. Secondary Sources This includes foods that we eat. These are the energy we have been provided by the primary sources. Secondary sources include foods like meat, plants, and grains. They are converted from primary sources into usable energy. Tertiary Sources These are things that are non-living, like chemicals and technology. These are utilised by us after we have created primary and secondary sources of energy. Tertiary sources of energy are used to create secondary sources, and the energy produced by tertiary sources is used to create primary sources. Energy Conversion Energy conversion is what takes energy from one form and uses it to transform it into another. It is therefore the only way that we can use an available source to create more energy. To put it into context, the movement of energy in our universe is a kind of energy conversion. Energy moves in an arc all the way from its source to its end use, and back again. A good example of this energy conversion is the burning of methane to create electricity and warmth. Energy conversion takes three types of energy to create an energy conversion. They are primary, secondary, and tertiary. This differs from energy conversion because it is the focus on the latter two that we are all familiar with.
