The expected confrontation between Oliver Stone and Jesse Ventura, a former pro wrestler and member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, over the Bush White House's method for killing U.S. citizens without legal representation, may have to wait until Stone has finished The Untold History of the United States. Stone, the Oscar-winning director, has replaced his planned Truth commission on Iraq with the project and is in the final stages of researching and planning the project. The production company, 42, has released the first season of World War II miniseries, The Pacific, which documents the war from 1941 to 1945. The season ends with the Japanese surrender on August 14, 1945. Stone has been working on the project off and on for the past two years. According to Variety, Stone's film company is in the planning phase, but that still leaves a number of questions about the finished film. “... there’s a lot we don’t know,” Stone told CNN last month, while doing a promotional tour for The Pacific. “We’re just beginning to see images that are based on our research. There are a lot of questions, but there are no deals in place.” The U.S. government has refused to co-operate with the commission and Stone has turned to members of Congress for help. “... We’ve been refused because [U.S. Attorney General] John Ashcroft and [CIA Director] George Tenet don't want to discuss this in front of Congress," Stone told a journalist from Variety. Stone has been slowly increasing the scope of the movie, which was originally to be a 60-minute production. "We have four hours of material in the script now," Stone said last month. "There are hundreds of pages. I'm talking to one of the world's leading historians on this. He's a Pulitzer Prize winning author. He has a book on World War II that's a best-seller. We're thinking it should be made into a three hour movie. If nothing else we could show a three hour portion of the film and then six hours on the next run.” In September, it was reported that Stone was seeking a budget of $100 million for the new film. At that time, Stone’s production company was hoping to secure a $40 million U

Heterobimetallic Surrogate Metal-Organic Framework with Tunable Highly Structured Surface for Catalytic CO₂

Conversion. The rational design of catalytic heterobimetallic metal-organic frameworks (MOFs) is highly desired for their peculiar properties. Herein, a heterobimetallic MOF is constructed by a $\{M[12]C3O4(H2O)22\}_n$ topology bearing $[\{Eu(bpy)_2\}_2(btc)_2]_n$ (1) (Eu = Eu(III); btc = 1,4,7,10,13,16-hexaazatriphenylene-3,6,9,12-tetraoxacyclopentane-2,5,8,11-tetracarboxylic acid) as a bimetallic connector, which has a 2D zigzag-like chain topology.

Furthermore, compound 1 is expanded into the 3D framework by the building of 4'-(4,5-dihydroxy-7-oxa-3-propyl-2,2'-bipyridyl)biphenyl units into the btc lattice to form compound 2, with a 3D extended tetragonal topology. The structural evolution of 2 from 1 is investigated by the crystallographic analysis and computational studies, revealing that compound 2 exhibits a highly porous structure of two-dimensional stacked layers containing the chelating hexadentate 2,2'-bipyridine (2,2'-bpy) ligand and the chelating phenolic oxygen atoms which combine together to form the zigzag-[M₂(2,2'-bpy)₄(bpym)]_n (M = Co, Ni, and Eu) ladders. For the heterobimetallic MOF (M = Co, Ni, and Eu), the M-O bonds in the ladders and the phenolic oxygen atoms form bimetallic (M,O)-chelate bonds, resulting in the unique assembled M-O-M chains. Highly dispersed Ni centers in 2 are regarded as the good active catalytic centers, which can interact with CO₂ and convert it to CO, whereas the Eu centers only act as electrocatalytic redox centers. The catalytic conversion of CO₂ to CO is also investigated with 1, 2, and the heterobimetallic Eu
